Details on your candidature

My application builds upon extensive clinical, research, and leadership experience that directly aligns with the requirements for this vital role. As a committed intensive care nurse for over 20 years, with clinical, research, and teaching experience, as well as a current elected member of the N&AHP committee, I hold the foundational ICU expertise and existing ESICM engagement essential for this position.

My ICU-focused research and professional activity builds on my commitment to advancing intensive care practice. Currently, as Principal Investigator of the UK NIHR "FEARLESS" project (2023–2028), I am leading a comprehensive multi-method examination of collaborative working in intensive care units post-COVID-19, directly addressing workforce resilience and patient safety. This work builds upon earlier work most notably my funded evidence syntheses on interventions for family member involvement in ICUs and critical care telemedicine implementation, as well as COVID-19 research on staff and family member experience of virtual visiting. My broader ICU research encompasses organisational aspects including ICU design impacts on patients, families, and teams, contributing to evidence-based approaches to critical care delivery.

I have held leadership roles at both European and international levels, including Editor-in-Chief of the Journal of Interprofessional Care and Director of CAIPE, where I have led efforts to strengthen collaboration across health professions. As Founding Director of the European Academy of Interprofessional Science, I champion evidence-based team care, particularly relevant to ICU settings. My experience as an evaluator for European funding programmes and my NIHR Advanced Fellowship equip me to represent N&AHP interests within major European strategic initiatives.

I envisage strengthening the N&AHP Committee's influence across ESICM's activities. My networks across Europe and experience in collaborative research can facilitate partnerships that elevate the profile and impact of N&AHP contributions to intensive care medicine. My commitment to this role extends beyond administrative duties to advancing the scientific foundation of N&AHP practice in critical care, ensuring our professionals are equipped to lead innovation in increasingly complex healthcare environments.
