Details on your candidature

As a young intensivist, I strongly believe in the importance of empowering the next generation of professionals within our field. Since my early years in intensive care medicine, I have been committed not only to clinical excellence but also to education, mentoring, and the creation of opportunities for peers and younger colleagues. My involvement in ESICM's NEXT Committee since 2022 has allowed me to contribute to these goals and better understand the needs and challenges of our community.

I bring a combination of international clinical experience, strong involvement in education and a background in project development and mentoring, together with humanitarian cooperation. These experiences have helped me develop communication, leadership, and organizational skills that I want to further invest in NEXT.

If elected, I would like to strengthen the role of NEXT as a platform that not only represents young intensivists, but also creates bridges:

- Between training and career development, by expanding mentoring initiatives, supporting mobility, and promoting access to research opportunities.
- Between education and innovation, by designing projects that integrate simulation, digital tools, and new teaching methodologies tailored for younger generations.
- Between NEXT and the wider ESICM community, by fostering inclusion and ensuring that the voice of young intensivists is considered in key decisions.

– Between international peers, by building a network where collaboration, exchange, and support are accessible regardless of country or career stage.

I envisage this function as a chance to keep NEXT growing as a dynamic, inspiring, and approachable committee, where every young intensivist can find a place to contribute, learn, and feel represented. I am committed to working towards initiatives that will make NEXT an even stronger community for future intensivists.
