Details on your candidature

Having been elected to the NEXT Committee of ESICM and with extensive experience as an intensivist across multiple UK centres, I bring a combination of practical expertise, leadership, and commitment to advancing intensive care medicine. I am passionate about strengthening relationships and fostering deeper engagement among intensivists across Europe, and I believe that strong professional societies should serve as bridges to connect and unify colleagues, promoting collaboration, knowledge exchange, and the continuous development of our specialty.

My professional journey has spanned major UK centres, including Imperial College Healthcare NHS Trust in London, University Hospitals of Leicester NHS Trust in the East Midlands, and now the North West. Alongside my training, I have held senior roles as a Senior Clinical Fellow and ECMO Fellow at the UK's first ECMO centre, experiences which have enriched my expertise in advanced organ support and exposed me to the complexities of high-acuity care.

I am currently in the final stages of the Fellowship of the Faculty of Intensive Care Medicine (FFICM) examinations, having successfully completed the MCQ and SOE and preparing for the OSCE. In addition, I have achieved the European Diploma in Intensive Care (EDIC), providing me with a comprehensive understanding of intensive care training and assessment frameworks across both the UK and Europe. This dual qualification has strengthened my insight into the specialty's training pathways, examinations, and evolving career trajectories, equipping me to support and represent intensivists at all stages of their professional development.

Throughout my career, I have actively contributed to education and training, including serving as an examiner for medical students, organising courses on mechanical ventilation, and participating in various teaching activities, reinforcing my ability to mentor, inspire, and engage colleagues across disciplines and grades.

In terms to my experience with ESICM, I was elected to the NEXT Committee by intensivists under 37 across Europe, reflecting peer recognition of my leadership and commitment within the early-career community. During my tenure, I have contributed as faculty at the LIVES Congress, developed educational podcasts, participated in the Jamboree, and advanced initiatives supporting early-career intensivists. Additionally, as a member of the Research Committee, I have played a pivotal role in securing grants and awards for research projects and in the review and selection of high-quality submissions. These experiences have strengthened my understanding of ESICM's mission and provided insights into enhancing membership, fostering engagement, and maximizing impact among UK intensivists and across Europe.

As UK representative, my priorities would include:

Strengthening research collaboration and knowledge exchange across Europe.

Promoting inclusivity, engagement, and professional development for intensivists.

Increasing UK participation and ESICM membership through targeted advocacy and outreach.

Championing the next generation of intensivists while supporting established colleagues.

I believe my combination of national breadth, educational leadership, ESICM experience, early and current peer-recognized leadership, and strategic vision, alongside my dual understanding of examinations in both the UK and Europe, uniquely positions me to represent the United Kingdom with credibility, insight, and commitment. It would be an honour to serve in this role and contribute to shaping the future of intensive care medicine across Europe.
